Description

It would be cool to get packages for `bionic` before July 26th, when 18.04.1 is released and upgrade will become available for servers.

I found this thread (https://community.theforeman.org/t/foreman-installer-and-apt-support-for-ubuntu-18-04-bionic/9798) on the forum, but it would be nice to have a ticket to track progress on it.

It would be cool if puppetlabs would deliver the respective supoprt for it. Before that, we are blocked.

I assume you are talking about modules updates with bionic support. About which modules are you talking about exactly? Only puppetlabs-postgresql? Are there issues opened upstream to address that, so we can block on it? Blocking without a reference make no sense IMO :)

- All the modules, we're using in the installer (I'm checking this, once puppetserver is there)
- puppet-agent package (that's already there)
- puppetserver package (missing at the moment)
- Maybe I forgot something

    Are there issues opened upstream to address that, so we can block on it?

I don't know

puppetserver has been released for Ubuntu 18.04 LTS.

A quick investigation attempting to use the existing Xenial packages shows a requirement on Ruby 2.3, Bionic appears to only ship Ruby 2.5 (which according to a ticket here https://projects.theforeman.org/issues/22103 is not yet supported under The Foreman anyway?)

I have an ancient installation on Ubuntu 14.04 that I would like to replace with an Ubuntu 18.04 instance, so please let me know if I can help test any nightlies for you.

Pretty, please, wait for us to announce support. We have it on our radar.
