Description
The installer modules use the $fqdn fact in many places, esp also when generating certificates and stuff. Sometimes, the user would change the hostname of the machine where Foreman/Katello/Proxy is installed which might lead to problems because the installer will try to create new certificates which might not be desired. I think the installer should check that the current value of $fqdn matches what is in the answers already and warn the user about the situation. This could be implemented as a pre-hook.

Pulp's server config has a setting for the server name. We should match this to the name we use on the vhost. Currently that's tied to the Foreman vhost so we can make that explicit here.
