Fixes #33177 - Don't store incorrect referrer for redirect

When the client side uses `history.push` to navigate to a page that is not managed by react router, the router fallback will navigate to the new page. However, the browser URL is updated before the actual navigation, causing the `document.referrer` to point to the new URL instead of the previous one. In these cases, we can't reliably know where the user navigated from so we should clear the `redirect_to_url` from the session storage and rely on the default fallback (which is usually the respective index page).
