Description

This migration (https://github.com/theforeman/foreman-installer/commit/4155c66f59ea42fe10d709434d6ab5dcdb66b572) is directed at the proxy-content puppet module, but it needs to be migrated through the Katello puppet module. As a result, folks are seeing the redis cache being turned off on their systems. Community thread:

Fixes #35157 - Enable Pulp's content caching on Katello

Like 4155c66f59ea42fe10d709434d6ab5dcdb66b572 but for the Katello scenario.

Katello expects the redis cache to be enabled. If it isn't it fails. Perhaps the redis cache should be permanently on rather than configurable.

I don't see how that could work. puppet-katello doesn't have any Pulp settings: it's all in puppet-foreman_proxy_content. Perhaps you meant the katello installer scenario? https://community.theforeman.org/t/upgrade-issue-to-4-4-1-internal-server-error-and-a-notice-about-4-5-rc2/29124/15 suggests you are talking about the katello scenario.
