Is it just the one setting, or any? I can't reproduce this, so would appreciate it if you could check your browser console for any Javascript errors that might be related (Ctrl+Shift+J in Chrome for instance).

(Note that this setting is entirely unused now too.)

It's only that setting, if it's unused why not remove it? I'm not on the dev mailinglist....

Now it's not that field anymore, but strangely it's the field above it.... "puppet_interval"

Is this what you need?

window.controllers is deprecated. Do not use it for UA detection. https-everywhere.js:364

Use of getUserData() or setUserData() is deprecated. Use WeakMap or element.dataset instead. requestNotifier.js:52

Use of getPreventDefault() is deprecated. Use defaultPrevented instead.

Empty string passed to getElementById().

Sure, it should be removed.

Empty string passed to getElementById().@

Looks the most suspect, but I don't see it here. Maybe try another browser?

Nope nothing in Chrome but also the same issue.

What I notice is that normally I get an hand icon with edit this field and for this field it changes to a text field prompt.

I added a screenshot to show.

Puppet has been refactored and moved to another plugins, looks like this bug was a client issue
